ROYAL LIVERPOOL

This 82nd ranked course in the world was the second English course to host the Open Championship and has done so a total of twelve times (5th most in history). Hoylake, as it's commonly known as, is the second oldest seaside links course in England and was originally designed by George Morris (Old Tom's brother) and Robert Chambers before Harry Colt later altered the course. The REVENUE genuine test of golf, especially with only six holes set amongst the dunes leaving little protection from the ever-changing wind on the remaining twelve holes.

ROYAL LYTHAM & ST ANNES

Ranked 52nd in the world, Royal Lytham & St Annes first opened in 1886 and was originally designed by then club professional George Lowe. The course was later redesigned by the trio of Harry Colt, Herbert Fowler and Tom Simpson. While this eleven-time Open Championship site is not a traditional “links” course as it lacks large, shaggy dunes, massively undulating fairways and sea views, the course plays every bit like a links course calling upon accuracy and creativity from its players.

ROYAL BIRKDALE

Ranked 23rd in the world, Royal Birkdale has hosted nearly every major professional and amateur championship, including two Ryder Cups and ten Open Championships with the most recent being in 2017 when Jordan Spieth hoisted the Claret Jug. While widely recognized for its fairness, the course will challenge every facet of your game from the carries from tee to fairway, especially when the wind is up, to its tough greens, which were re-built prior to the 1998 Open.
